ROY A. HOAGLAND

Roy A. Hoagland joined the Virginia Environmental Endowment as its Senior Program Officer in 2018. Prior thereto, he worked on Chesapeake Bay watershed issues for over 35 years, advocating for clean water and healthy local and regional environments and communities in a variety of forums and arenas. His experience has included partnering with citizens, watershed groups, funders, nontraditional partners, and government agencies in the development and adoption of progressive reform initiatives, from local land use matters to national policy. He has legislative, regulatory, and policy experience at the state, regional and federal levels. As Vice President of Environmental Protection and Restoration for the Chesapeake Bay Foundation, he oversaw CBF's policy work on water quality and land conservation, its environmental restoration efforts, and its grassroots and citizen engagement activities. He led CBF's advocacy in the development of the Chesapeake Bay Total Maximum Daily Load, one of the most progressive ecosystem restoration plans in the nation. While the Director of William & Mary Law School's Virginia Coastal Policy Center, he managed the Center's engagement in climate change and environmental justice matters. Governors Spanberger and McAuliffe appointed him to the Virginia Air Pollution Control Board and he is the recipient of the Erchul Environmental Leadership Award. He is a graduate of Dickinson College and the University of Maryland Frances King Carey School of Law.
